

The Fearful Choice: A Debate on Nuclear Policy

Wayne State University Press. 112 pp. $2.50.

The controversial debate conducted last year by Philip Toynbee with twenty-two of Britain's leading intellectuals and churchmen on the alternatives posed by the present direction of nuclear policy is now available in an American edition.

The Devil's Repertoire

by Victor Gollancz. Doubleday. 192 pp. $2.50.

In an appeal to man's higher emotions, the noted British writer and publisher enters a vigorous plea for nuclear disarmament and inveighs against "the devil's repertoire" of the non-pacifist opposition.

Christian Affirmations in a Secular Age

by Giovanni Miegge. Oxford. 170 pp. $3.75.

In his concern for the decline of Christianity as a force in modern society, a distinguished Italian Protestant theologian has written a book which he calls "a meditation on the great themes of the Christian faith, directed by the constant desire not to forget, and not to underestimate, the problems and difficulties of contemporary man."

The Movement of World Revolution

by Christopher Dawson. Sheed & Ward 179 pp. $3.00.

An analysis of the currents of social change as they have spread from Western Europe to the Asia and Africa of our century, this study by an eminent British historian challenges the Christian Church to meet its obligations to the newly-secularized nation-states of the East.

Syria: A Short History

by Philip K. Hitti. Macmillan. 271 pp. $4.50.

A convenient condensation of an earlier, larger work, this volume offers an expanded final chapter dealing with Syria's critical role in Middle Eastern affairs.

American Foreign Affairs

by William Lytle Schurz. E. P. Dutton. 265 pp. $4.50.

In the belief that "the public has the challenging obligation to inform itself . . . of the issues and the facts that are raw materials of foreign affairs," the author, a historian, journalist and former State Department official, provides a guide to problems in international affairs and some of the forces that help to shape them.
