The Troubled Partnership

In his "Reappraisal of the Atlantic Alliance," Mr. Kissinger deals with the structural and political problems which affect the shape of the allied partnership. He states at one point that "no one man could have disrupted the Alliance by himself," but he warns that any "systematic and rigid conception of Atlantic partnership" will be contrary to the interests of all.

The Anguish of the Jews

Edward H. Flannery, Macmillan, 332 pp. $1.25 (paper).

Fr. Flannery notes in his introduction to what may be the first history of the subject by a Catholic priest, that his main purpose in writing a description of the growth of anti-Semitism was an ecumenical one. For "how can the Jew, laden with the knowledge of his centuries-old oppression in Christendom confront, on even ground, the Christian who is sincerely convinced that his convert is too persecution-minded?"

Apartheid and United Nations Collective Measures

Vernon McKay, William O. Brown, William A. Hance, and the editor have provided a study in depth of apartheid in South and South West Africa and of alternative political and economic actions which might be taken to resolve a "potentially explosive situation." Single copies are free; additional copies are $1.00.

The Conscience of India:
Moral Traditions in the Modern World

Craighton Lacy, Holt, Rinehart & Winston. 323 pp. $7.50.

The author has tried "to show how the great currents of moral and philosophical and political thought in India's past are being reflected and expressed in her society today." One conclusion he reaches is that "the psychological, moral and religious ingredients for democracy and social welfare cannot be derived from traditional Hinduism."

Foreign Policy in the Sixties
